

Winter Term 2025/26

Political Parties in a Comparative Perspective

Seminar Date and Format

Version: September 25, 2025

The seminar is scheduled every week on Wednesday from 16:00 to 18:00 (c.t.). The first session takes place on 15 October 2025 and the final session will be held on 21 January 2026. The seminar is open to undergraduate students, the course language is English. The seminar follows the form of a ‘Standardkurs’ which introduces students to different aspects in the study of political parties. No prior knowledge is needed. Credits can only be granted if participants read and engage with the readings before the seminar and pass the seminar requirements.

Course Overview

This seminar deals with a critical actor in representative democracies: political parties. The course is structured along four blocks. The first block seeks to introduce students to the topic. Methodologically, we will learn how to approach and critically assess the course literature. Substantively, we will discuss the role of parties in contemporary democracies. The second block is dedicated to the origins of political parties. We will explore how institutions and societal developments contribute to their emergence. In a third block, we will learn about parties’ functions in democracies. We will start with their recruiting functions and assess the implications of candidate selection methods for democratic representation. Thereafter, the following three sessions deal with parties as electoral organizations. How do parties appeal to their voters? On which agenda do they decide and which groups do they target? How do they respond to their competitors? And how do parties behave when forming (coalition) governments? The final block is reserved for a practice session on how to study political parties and a session in which students present their project ideas for the oral exam.

Learning Outcomes

The course will familiarize you with key concepts and approaches in the study of political parties. You will learn what parties are and how they are embedded in different party systems. You will acquire an understanding of the institutional and sociological determinants of parties' origins. Moreover, you will explore which tasks parties fulfill in representative democracies. More specifically, you will learn how they appeal to voters, how they recruit their political personnel and how they behave in government. Methodologically, the course will prepare you with reading academic articles and accessing data sources to examine parties.

We will deal with various aspects of political parties during the course. However, in the end, your learning outcomes heavily depend on your own interest. The writing of your essay and the choice of a topic for your oral exam will further sharpen your theoretical knowledge on the respective topic and your methodological know-how on the research design you propose.

Requirements

The amount of credits granted depends on the programme you are enrolled in. Keep in mind that each ECTS amounts to about 30 hours of working time. The final mark is composed of the following components. A successful seminar participation requires the following tasks to fulfil (estimated hours based on $7 \text{ ECTS} * 30 = 210$)

- | | |
|---|-------------|
| • regular attendance and active participation in discussion | 18 hours |
| • questions on two empirical articles | } 192 hours |
| • connecting-thoughts essay | |
| • oral exam (graded) | |

Attendance and Questions on the Readings

Students should regularly attend the seminar. In case you miss a session, please inform me about your absence. Attendance requires active participation in class which presumes careful reading of the literature. This is an introductory class, which reviews essentials in the study of party politics. Each week, there is one main reading everyone is supposed to read. In addition, the complementary readings contain further information that support you in writing your essay and preparing for the oral exam.

When reading the empirical paper: There are different reading techniques (cf. Keshav), often requiring several rounds. You should always take notes – either during or directly after reading the text. Focus on the core message of the author. Try to identify the puzzle and the question an author presents, their arguments, and the general methodological approach (for a first read, do not get lost in the details!). Then always ask yourself whether you can follow the argumentation. On which point do you disagree and why? Once you are able to summarize the core idea of a paper within two minutes, you are ready to go. If you have problems in understanding the text, write them down and we'll try to clarify them in class.

For two sessions of your choice (except for week 1-3, 12-15), you are asked to submit three different questions about the main reading. The questions need to be submitted on Monday, 23:59 in the week of the respective session. You are, in general, free to choose the sessions you would like to submit your questions on, but for a better distributions across sessions, the number of students submitting questions to a seminar session is limited to five (a distribution will take place on Learnweb after the first session of the seminar). The questions should not be about the general comprehension of the text (these can and should be raised separately in class). For instance, you should not ask what the results of the article are. Instead, your written questions should critically engage with the theoretical argument of an article, the match between theory and research design or the wider implications of a research finding for the behaviour of political parties (among other things). Each question should be followed by a brief explanation (2-3 sentences) on why this question came to your mind, i.e., why is the question important? The questions must clearly relate to the article.

‘Connecting-Thoughts’ Essay

During the term, you are asked to prepare one ‘connecting-thoughts’ essay that is used to stimulate in-class discussions. The session you prepare your essay on is up to you – with the exception of week 1-3 and 12-15.

While you are usually only obliged to read the main reading, for the ‘connecting-thoughts’ essay, you must read at least one of the complementary readings, too. In preparation to the seminar, you are required to write a short essay on the complementary reading, briefly summarizing its results, before evaluating how it connects to the main reading.

The essays should be no longer than three pages (12 font size, 2.5cm margins, 1.5 spacing). It needs to be submitted on Monday, 23:59 in the week of the respective session, late submissions cannot be accepted and lead to a 'fail' on the assignment. Summarizing the complementary reading should be no more than one page. You should introduce its research question, the main argument it seeks to test, a short acknowledgement of its methodology, before turning to the core result of the paper. Thereafter, you should highlight how the paper relates to the main reading. Do both readings come to similar conclusions or are there misalignments between them? Do we learn something from the complementary reading we did not know from the main one (e.g., in terms of the methods it is using or its results)? The essay ends with a critical review of the paper's strengths and weaknesses.

During the seminar session, you are serving as the expert and moderator on the readings. This implies that you are leading a small-group discussion that deals with the other students' questions on the paper. Moreover, you are asked to provide the class with input and a critical evaluation of the complementary reading.

Oral Exam

To obtain a grade for the seminar (so-called Prüfungsleistung), you will be assessed in an oral exam. The oral exam takes place in the final week of the seminar (on February 4/5).

Students can choose among sessions 4-11 to prepare a 10-15 minute presentation. In the presentation, students should pitch a research idea. In principle, the research idea should include all elements of an empirical political science article. Specifically, the presentation needs to include:

- a research question
- an outline of its theoretical and societal relevance
- a brief review of existing literature on the issue
- a theoretical argument with testable hypotheses
- a research design (data and methods) to be used to study the question
- a brief outlook on what potential implications and challenges of the study could be

Students do not need to carry out the analysis, which can however serve as inspiration for future term papers or the BA thesis. The presentation is followed by a 15-20 minute Q/A by the examiner. In the Q/A, you will be asked questions on related readings, as well as questions on your research idea. Students will be evaluated based on their factual knowledge on the readings and the development of their research idea.

On 21 January, students have the opportunity to present their idea to their fellow classmates. This allows them to receive feedback which they can work on in the remaining two weeks before the actual oral exam.

Plagiarism

Plagiarism and ghostwriting are forbidden. Written assignments may be checked for plagiarism using the plagiarism software Turnitin.

Students are required to use referenced work in their assignments with proper documentation and citation. To facilitate the citation workflow and prepare for future assignments in the programme, students are encouraged to use reference software. Students can use the open-source software Zotero free of charge. When in doubt about proper citation, please refer to the Leitlinien zum wissenschaftlichen Arbeiten provided by the Department of Political Science.

You need to be transparent about the usage of AI tools at the end of your submitted writings (Which tools did you use? Which prompts did you issue?). AI can be a helpful tool for coding, language editing and information retrieval. Still, please keep in mind that you are expected to submit original work which is based on your own ideas. Your creative process can be assisted by AI tools. However, you need to attach a complete list of prompts you used during your research as an appendix to your manuscript. If you fail to be transparent, you'll fail the class.

Inclusiveness

To promote inclusiveness, this seminar instructor uses gender-inclusive language (on why gender-inclusive language can be useful: Tavits and Pérez 2019; Vervecken, Hannover, and Wolter 2013). Participants are invited to share their pronouns with the class. To allow for a dynamic feedback culture, students are encouraged to regularly submit (anonymous) feedback via Google Forms (link tba) or by sending me a mail.

Week 1: Introduction [15 October 2025]

There is no need to prepare anything from your side. We will talk about the structure of the seminar, expectations and your existing knowledge about political parties.

Week 2: Research Design [22 October 2025]

In this session, we will discuss the method of comparison in political science and explore key elements of political science literature.

Main readings

1. King G, Keohane RO, and Verba S (1994) Designing Social Inquiry: Scientific Inference in Qualitative Research, New Edition. Princeton University Press. 266 pp., Ch. 1

Week 3: Party Democracy [29 October 2025]

This week, we will discuss why political parties are needed for a functioning democracy. We will also introduce their key functions, which we will discuss in greater detail in the following sessions.

Week 4: Institutions and Party Systems [05 November 2025]

How do parties emerge? Scholars usually underscore two important determinants: (1) institutions and (2) societal transformations. In this session, we will focus on the former and discuss how the electoral system and other institutional arrangements shape party systems' origins.

Week 7: Preference Aggregation and Articulation [26 November 2025]

Contemporary elections are unthinkable without political parties. One of their central tasks in structuring elections is to aggregate and communicate citizens demands. For this session, the class is split. One part of the class reads the article by Hobolt and Vries (2015), while the rest of the class reads Huber (2022). We will discuss the different views of these articles on parties’ electoral competition.

Week 8: Talking with Practitioners [03 December 2025]

In this week, Thomas Paal and Julia Dickfer will visit us in their role as elections administrator and citizens' service of Münster. They will introduce us to their experiences with organizing elections and their view on political parties. The major part of the session is dedicated to a Q/A with the students. No readings are required, instead, students need to prepare questions in anticipation of the session.

Week 9: Mobilization and Competition [10 December 2025]

No party acts in a vacuum. Instead, parties are integrated in a dynamic party system. They react to other parties' behavior. Focusing on the example of the radical right, we analyse how parties' respond to new challengers and discuss the electoral implications of different strategies.

Week 11: Crisis of Party Democracy [07 January 2026]

Throughout the seminar, we have stressed the importance of parties in advanced democracies. There is, however, an alternative perspective which points to the erosion of party democracy. Party membership and identification declines, citizens become disillusioned from politics. Are we experiencing a crisis of party democracy?

Week 12: Analysing Political Parties [14 January 2026]

This is a lab session, where we will exploit potential data sources to study political parties. Please bring your laptops with you. More information will follow in the preceding week.

Week 13: Student Presentations [21 January 2026]

At the end of the seminar, you are supposed to draft a research design in your oral exam. This session serves as a test run, where you are supposed to pitch your idea to your fellow student mates and receive valuable feedback.

Week 14: No session [28 January 2026]

There is no session in this week. There will be individual consultations upon request.

Week 15: Oral Exams [04 February 2026]

In this week, oral exams take place.
